New SGS Green Mark Scheme: Per- and Polyfluorinated Substances (PFAS) Assessed Certification

The growing awareness of the global Per- and Polyfluorinated Substances (PFAS) pollution crisis has triggered both increased customer requirements as well as regulatory proposals to restrict the use of PFAS in products and processes.

The electronics industry is one key sector where PFAS are used in a variety of applications, such as protective coating in various parts like PCB, LCD etc., dielectric films and liquid impregnates in capacitors and resistors. PFAS is also commonly found in wiring and cables, batteries, moving parts in EEE. One challenge for many companies operating in the sector is to understand where and why PFAS are being used in their own processes and products.
